The following facts relating to the early History of Litchfield, resting either in tradition, or concealed amidst a mass of other matter, I had the curiosity to collect in moments of leisure, and to arrange for subsequent reference. And I have deemed it well to incorporate therein, extracts from Morris' statistical account of Litchfield, as that work is nearly out of print, and the facts it contains being interesting to a native of this town. I am also indebted to gentlemen in this village, for some of the facts herein recorded. Many others are doubtless in the memory of our older inhabitants, and valuable documents may be found among the papers of those no longer living, developing the manners and customs and early history of our ancestors. Should such be communicated to me, I may hereafter take measures to embody them for preservation and the benefit or gratification of posterity.

HISTORY

OF THE

TOWN OF LITCHFIELD.

CHAPTER I.

By the charter of King Charles the 2d, to the Governor and Company of the Colony of Connecticut, granted A. D. 1662, the boundaries of the Colony were, the Narraganset River on the East, the Sea on the South, the line of the Massachusetts plantation on the North, and the South Sea on the West. Within these boundaries, were included the town and county of Litchfield, which town, until the organization of the county in 1751, was a part of the county of Hartford.

In 1685, on the decease of Charles, his brother James the 2d, ascended the throne. He is represented as having been an "obstinate, cruel tyrant, and a bigoted Roman Catholic, destitute of all the principles of true honor, faith, justice or humanity. The most humble petitions, arguments from reason, charters, the most solemn compact, and royal promises; from justice, humanity, or any other consideration which a subject could plead, had no weight or influence with him. Nearly fifty corporations in England had been deprived of their charters."

With a monarch of such a character, the institutions of New England found no favor. The charter of Massachusetts was vacated. Rhode Island submitted. Its inhabitants, and those of the Narraganset country, were discharged from all obedience either to Connecticut or Rhode Island.

Writs of quo warranto were issued against the Governor and Company of Connecticut, requiring them to show by what warrant they exercised certain powers and privileges, and this under circumstances which showed that it was no part of the King's intention to do them justice.

PROGRESS OF THE

COMMISSIONERS OF THE LAND OFFICE
IN THE YEAR 1851

By the Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies

LONDON: Printed by W. G. and J. S. Smith, Stationers, in Pall Mall.

The government of Connecticut omitted no probable means for the preservation of their chartered rights. But in the year 1687, Sir Edmund Andross, (a fit instrument for such a king,) failing to obtain the surrender or possession of our charter, forcibly assumed the government of the Colony. The charter, the possession of which he coveted, (at the present time in the State House at Hartford,) was secreted, as is well known, in the hollow of an oak now standing in Hartford, called the Charter Oak.

During this period, and, as it was said, for the purpose of "saving the lands from the grasp of Sir Edmund, and to prevent his enriching himself and his minions by a sale of them," the legislature, on the 26th of January 1786, conveyed to the towns of Hartford and Windsor, as follows: "This Court grants to the plantations of Hartford and Windsor, those lands on the north of Woodbury and Mattatuck,* and on the west of Farmington and Simsbury, to the Massachusetts line north, to run west to the Housatonic or Stratford river; provided, it be not or part of it granted to any particular person to make a plantation or village."

This conveyance subsequently created serious difficulty in the Colony, and gave rise to forcible resistance to the public authority.

It was claimed on the part of the colony, that the grant was without consideration, and that those towns were to hold the lands in trust for the Colony till the time of danger should be past.

But those towns denied the justice of the demands of the Colony, and claimed the lands as absolutely their own, and in contravention of the laws of the Colony proceeded to survey and sell them. Some of the offenders were arrested and punished, some were committed to the prison in Hartford. The inhabitants of Windsor and Hartford armed themselves, and in spite of the power and authority of the sheriff, and the assembly, broke open the goal and rescued the prisoners. These events occurred in 1722.

The towns still continued to lay out the disputed lands, and the legislature to pursue spirited measures to prevent it. The controversy assumed a still more serious aspect, but was finally amicably adjusted in May 1726, by dividing the lands in controversy, between the towns of Hartford and Windsor on the one part, and the Colony on the other.

From this division, however, the town of Litchfield, though a part of the disputed territory, was exempted, as were also other lands previously conveyed by those towns.

Those interested in the town of Litchfield had, indeed, some time before the controversy attained its height, with commendable prudence, taken measures to perfect their title by obtaining grants from all claimants.

CHAPTER II.

Our ancestors were not of those who pretended that the aborigines had no right to the soil which had for centuries been occupied by them and their fathers. The settlers of Connecticut deemed it a matter of conscience, to abstain from trespassing upon the lands of the natives, much more from depriving them of those lands until they were fairly purchased.

It is said that before the settlement of this town by the whites, a tribe resided here, probably on the borders of the lake, in alliance with the powerful tribe of Indians at New Milford, but still independent of them.

The Tunxis or Farmington tribe of Indians adjoined them on the east, and how far their territories extended into this township, if at all, is uncertain.

But I find that as early as the year 1657, certain Indians of that tribe conveyed to William Lewis and Samuel Steele of Farmington, certain privileges as appears by the following copy of their deed, viz :

“This witnesseth that we Kepaquamp and Querrimus and Matancage have sould to William Leawis and Samuel Steele of ffarmington A p sell or a tract of land called Matetucke, that js to say the hill from whence John Standley and John Andrews brought the black lead, and all the land within eight mylle of that hill on every side ; to dig ; and carry away what they will and to build in jt for ye use of them that labour there ; and not otherwise to improve ye land. In witness whereof wee have hereunto set our hands, and thos Indians above mentioned must free the purchasers from all claymes by any other Indyans.

Precisely where the hill referred to in this deed was situated, I have been unable to discover, but from the subsequent claims of the grantees, from tradition, and from the deed itself, it would seem that it was in the southern part of Harwinton, and embraced that town, and also some portion of Plymouth (then Matatuck or Waterbury) and Litchfield. This purchase was made by the grantees in behalf of themselves and a company composed of certain other inhabitants of Farmington. And on

By virtue of these deeds, certain inhabitants of Farmington claimed a title to a portion of this township. But it will be observed, that their title, whatever it was, was derived from the natives only. And that the title of the Colony, was vested in the Towns of Hartford and Windsor. Those Towns therefore claimed the exclusive right to purchase the Indian title, and on doing so, to survey and sell the Lands.

The affairs of "The Western Lands," as they were called, were managed by committees severally appointed by those Towns, who acted in conjunction. As early as 1715, those Towns took measures to explore the Township of Litchfield, and to purchase the native rights. Mr. John Marsh of Hartford, one of the first settlers of this Town, and the ancestor of the Marshes of Litchfield, was one of the committee appointed for that purpose, by the Town of Hartford. He was an energetic and courageous man, and in May 1715 undertook what was then a perilous journey into the pathless wilderness. His bill as appears from our ancient records was as follows:

The Town of Hartford Dr.,

I find also the following charges made in January following to the Town of Hartford, by a committee for managing the affairs of the Western Land.

The result of the negotiations with the Indians, was the sale by them to the Towns of Hartford and Windsor of the Township of Litchfield. For aught that appears, it was fairly purchased, and we have no evidence that the natives became dissatisfied with it, or expressed any unwillingness to surrender the possession. They subsequently gave the settlers little trouble. The capture of Griswold and the murder of Harris were the only exceptions, and whether these were the acts of the natives of Bantam, or of the fierce and warlike Mohawks who extended their predatory excursions into these regions, and to whom our tribes were tributary, is uncertain.

The Indian deed of this Town was executed at Woodbury March 2d, 1715, (probably 1716 N. S.) and is as follows, viz :

“To all people to whom those presents shall come—Know ye that we CHUSQUNNOAG, CORKSKREW, QUIUMP, MAGNASH, KEHOW, SEPUNKUM, PONI, WONPOSET, SUCKQUNNOKQUEEN, TOWEECUME, MANSUMPANSII, NORKENOTONCKQUY—Indian natives belonging to the plantation of POTATUCK within the Colo-

The Committees, named in this deed, conveyed all their interest in said Lands, to the Towns of Hartford and Windsor, by Deed dated August 29, 1716.

The conflicting claims to this Township, between the Towns of Hartford and Windsor on the one part, and "certain considerable persons in the Town of Farmington," on the other, arising out of the preceding conveyances, were subsequently amicably adjusted by the parties. The Farmington company, by their attorney John Stanley, on the 11th of June 1718, conveyed their interest to the Towns of Hartford and Windsor, and in consideration thereof, those individuals were invested by those Towns with one sixth part of this Township.

CHAPTER III.

The title to this Township having thus been entirely vested in the Towns of Hartford and Windsor, and in certain inhabitants of Farmington; in 1718, a company was formed for the settlement of the Town.

The Township was divided into sixty rights or shares, three of which were reserved for pious uses. Purchasers having been found for the remaining fifty-seven shares, on the 27th of April 1719, Deeds of conveyance of that date, were made, by committees of the Towns of Hartford and Windsor, and certain inhabitants of Farmington, conveying to the purchasers the whole plantation called Bantam.

Exclusive of three rights reserved for pious uses, the consideration paid for forty-eight of the shares, was £229,10, in bills of public credit. That paid for seven shares, was £31,4. The deeds of the above fifty-five shares, are recorded on our Records. How much was paid for the remaining two shares, which were purchased by Mr. John Marsh, does not appear.

The Township contains about 44,800 acres, and the purchase money did not exceed one penny three farthings per acre.

The three home lots, with the divisions belonging thereto, i. e. 1-20 of the whole plantation, devoted to public purposes, were, one home lot with the divisions and commons thereto pertaining, to the first minister his heirs &c. forever; one, to the use of the first minister and his successors ; and one, for the support of the school.

It was provided in the Deeds, that, "the Grantees or their sons, should build a tenantable house on each home lot, or on their division, not less than 16 feet square, and personally inhabit them, by the last day of May 1721, and for three years ensuing ; and do not lease or dispose of their share for five years hereafter, without consent of Inhabitants or first Planters."*

The title thus acquired, was immediately after still further confirmed by act of Assembly in May, 1719, as follows, viz :

"At a General Assembly holden at Hartford, May, A. D. 1719 :

Upon the petition of Lieut. John Marsh of Hartford, and Deacon John Buel of Lebanon, with many others, praying liberty, under committees appointed by the towns of Hartford and Windsor, to settle a town westward of Farmington, at a place called Bantam :

This Assembly do grant liberty, and full power, unto the said John Marsh and John Buel and partners settlers, being in the whole fifty-seven in number, to settle a town at said Bantam ; the said town to be divided into sixty rights, three whereof to be improved for pious uses in said town. And the other fifty-seven shall be, as soon as may conveniently be, settled upon by the undertakers, or upon their failure, by others that may be admitted. Said town to be in length, east and west,

A Patent was afterwards granted to these Proprietors, dated May 19th, 1724, which may be seen in the Appendix.

The township was originally divided into sixty home lots of fifteen acres each, as near as could conveniently be done, and any deficiency there might be, was made up to the owner of the deficient lot, elsewhere; and still farther divided from time to time, into Divisions and Pitches of 4, 20, 60, and 100 acres, &c. &c.

A few individuals commenced the settlement of the town in the year 1720. In the year 1721, a considerable number, chiefly from the towns of Hartford, Windsor and Lebanon, moved on to the tract.*

The choice of home-lots, was decided by lot. The first lot selected was about half a mile south of the Court House, and next to Middle Street, or Gallows Lane. The second was half a mile further south, and on the corner opposite the late residence of Mr. James Prescott. The third three fourths of a mile west of the Court House, known as the Strong place. The eleventh choice was the lot thirty rods next west of the County House corner, which subsequently the town voted, was not fit for building a house upon. The Mansion House corner was the twentieth choice. The corner now owned by Mr. Oliver Goodwin, was the twenty-fifth choice. The County House corner was the thirty-third choice. Ten lots were selected on Chesnut hill, on both sides of the road and lying southerly from the school house near Mr. Eliada Peck's. The last choice (the 57th) was the lot on which the Hotel of Mr. George Bolles now stands.

The home lot of the first minister, was located on the corner where now stands the dwelling house owned by Mr. Frederick Deming; and the twenty acre division appurtenant thereto, was laid adjoining on the north, and extended to the north line of the premises occupied by the late Mr. Eaton Jones. The home lot and twenty acre division for the use of the first minister and his successors, adjoining on the north. And the home lot and twenty acre division for the school, adjoining the latter on the north.

The highway from Bantam river, running westerly through the village, was laid out, twenty rods wide, and called Meeting House street. That now called North street, twelve rods wide, and was called Town street. That now called South street, eight rods wide, and was called Town Hill street, and the east line terminated six rods east of the front of Mr. Oliver Goodwin's dwelling house. That now called Gallows Lane, twenty-eight rods wide, and was called Middle street. That running southerly from the residence of the late Mr. William Ward, four rods wide was called South Griswold street; and that running northerly was 8 rods wide, and called North Griswold street. That now called Prospect street, twenty rods wide, but soon reduced to seventeen rods, and was called North street.

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the cold. It was a sharp, biting cold that seemed to seep into my bones. I shivered as I walked towards the building, my hands tucked into my pockets. The air was thick with the scent of old books and dust. I had heard that the library was a place of magic, a place where knowledge was stored in the most beautiful way. Now
 I was here, and I was in for a surprise.
 The building was a masterpiece of architecture, a blend of old and new.
 The entrance was a grand hall with high ceilings and ornate chandeliers.
 The walls were covered in bookshelves that reached up to the ceiling. The floor was made of polished wood, and the air was filled with the sound of pages turning. I walked through the hall, my eyes taking in everything I saw. The books were arranged in a way that was both logical and artistic.
 I found a small table in the corner and sat down, pulling out a book from the shelf. The book was old, with a worn cover and yellowed pages. I opened it and began to read. The words were simple, but they told a story that was both fascinating and terrifying. I was drawn into the story, and I didn't realize how long I had been sitting there until the lights came on. I looked up, and I saw a man standing in the doorway. He was tall, with long hair and a beard. He was wearing a long coat and a hat.
 He looked at me for a moment, and then he spoke. His voice was deep and gravelly, but it was also kind.
 He told me that the library was a place of secrets, a place where the past was kept alive. He told me that the books were not just stories, but windows into the world. He told me that I was welcome here, and that I should stay as long as I wanted.
 I looked at him, and I saw a man who had seen things that most people couldn't. I saw a man who was a guardian of knowledge, a man who was dedicated to his work. I saw a man who was a part of something much bigger than himself. I saw a man who was a friend, and I knew that I was in a special place.
 I stood up and thanked him, and he nodded. He told me that I could find the book I was looking for in the back room. I walked towards the back room, and I saw a door that was slightly ajar. I pushed the door open, and I saw a room that was filled with books. The books were arranged in a way that was both logical and artistic.
 I found the book I was looking for,
 and I took it. I walked back to the front room, and I saw the man standing in the doorway. He looked at me, and he smiled. He told me that the book was a good one, and that I should read it. I nodded, and I walked out of the library. I was in for a surprise, and I was in for a journey.

The first Church, Court House, and School House, stood nearly in the center of Meeting House street, the Court House about opposite the center of Town street, the Church east, and the School House west of the Court House.

The first white child born in Litchfield was Eunice, the daughter of Jacob Griswold, afterwards the wife of Capt. Solomon Buel. She was born March 23, 1721. The first white male child, born in Litchfield, was Gershom Gibbs, on the 28th of July 1721. He was taken prisoner at Fort Washington, and died in captivity. His son Gershom, was born July 18, 1750, and died here in September 1843.

Many persons have died in this town between the age of 90 and 100. The mother of the late Judge Adams, was born in Stratford in 1698, and died here in the year 1803, aged 105. Mr. Reuben Dickinson was born in 1716, and died here in 1818, aged 102. The oldest man now (1845) living here, is Mr. John Hall, a soldier of the Revolution, born February 26, 1754. The next is Mr. Daniel Lamson, also a Revolutionary soldier, born March 28, 1754.

CHAPTER IV.

The first inhabitants of this town, were thoroughly imbued with a sense of the importance of education, virtue, and religion, to the welfare of themselves, and their posterity. The experience of their forefathers had taught them, that perfect freedom of opinion and religion, could not be enjoyed under the European Governments; and they were satisfied that our peculiar Institutions could not long survive the virtue and intelligence of the people. We accordingly find in the original conveyances of this plantation, ample provision made for the perpetuation of these blessings.

In carrying out their original designs, the first settlers of this town brought with them from Lebanon, the Rev. Timothy Collins, a candidate for the ministry, to preach for them. And at the first Town Meeting of which we have a record, viz. on the 6th of November 1721, he was "called to a settlement in this place, in the work of the ministry." The town then constituted but one Ecclesiastical Society, and for many years all votes relative to Ecclesiastical affairs, were passed in Town Meeting. In addition to the provision made in the deed, giving him in fee one sixtieth of the whole township, and also the use of another sixtieth part, (which last was called the Parsonage Right,) the Town then voted the following salary, viz: £57 per annum for the first four years, for the fifth £60, the sixth £70, the seventh £80, and to continue at £80 a year so long as he continued in the work of the ministry here. The Town also voted to give him £100, to be paid by the 1st of July then next, and his firewood so long as he continued here in said work. The amount of his firewood for a series of years was by vote to be eighty cords per annum. This provision (very liberal for the times) was accepted by Mr. Collins on the 12th of December 1721; he entered upon his labors, was ordained on the 19th of June 1723, and continued to be the minister of the Congregational Society till the 15th of November 1752, when he was dismissed. He afterwards continued here, acting as a Justice of the Peace, and in the practice Medicine, and died in 1776.

In January 1745-6, a committee was appointed to make sale and give deeds or leases of the Parsonage Right. And in March following the committee sold most or all of that right which was not afterwards leased to Mr. Champion, and conveyed it in fee simple to sundry individuals. On the 9th of February 1746-7, the town "Voted That the interest money arising upon the bonds for which the Parsonage Right was sold, be towards the payment of Mr. Collins' rate for the current year." What disposition was made of the principal, does not appear from the Records.

On the 26th of February 1753, the Town voted to give the Rev. Judah Champion, a native of East Haddam, a call to settle here in the work of the ministry, and to give him £2000 in old tenor money, for his settlement. And £800 per annum old tenor money for his salary.

Mr. Champion accepted the call, was ordained July 4th 1753, and continued in the ministry till 1798. His salary was continued till his decease in 1810, in his 82d year. For the purpose of paying the settlement of Mr. Champion, it was, on the 14th of June 1753, voted, to lease to him so much of the Parsonage Right as should be necessary for that purpose, for the term of 999 years. And on the 15th of January 1754, a lease of the home lot and twenty acre division adjoining, was given to Mr. Champion, in consideration of said settlement.

The School Right was disposed of as follows. On the 29th of December 1729, the Town voted, "That the School Right in Litchfield, shall be leased out for the maintainance of a School in said Litchfield, for 999 years ensuing." And also voted, "That the inhabitants of said Litchfield do oblige themselves and their successors, in y^e recognizance of Ten Thousand Pounds lawful money, to give a new lease of said right at the end of said term of 999 years, if there shall be occasion."

In pursuance of these votes, the committee appointed for that purpose, on the 15th of April 1730, leased to sundry individuals the School right, being one sixtieth of the Town, for 999 years. The grantees paying twenty-seven pounds annually for eight years, for the support of the School, and the 9th year, paying to the selectmen four hundred and fifty pounds, to be forever kept for the support of a school in Litchfield. To the lease was annexed, the following "P. S. Before signing and sealing, the above mentioned signers and sealers agreed, that whoever occupies and improves all the above land or lands, or any part of them, shall pay all rates and taxes that shall arise upon them or any part of them, during the whole term of the lease." And in the year 1767, it was "voted, to divide the money for which the school right was sold, between the old Society, the South Farms Society, and the Church of England, in proportion to the list of each part."

CHAPTER V.

"The Indian name of this Town, was Bantam. It took the name of Litchfield, when it was incorporated. The first founders built log houses. The settlement proceeded as fast as could be reasonably expected, from the circumstances. During frequent wars between England and France, the Canadians and Indians often harrassed our borders ; and Litchfield, being a frontier town, was exposed to their ravages.

Between the years 1720 and 1730, five houses were surrounded with pallisadoes. One of these stood on the ground near the present Court House, another about half a mile south, one east, and one west of the centre ; and one in South Farms. Soldiers were then stationed here to guard the Inhabitants, both while they were at work in the field, and while they were attending public worship on the Sabbath."

"In May 1722, Capt. Jacob Griswold, being at work alone in a field about one mile west of the present Court House, two Indians suddenly rushed upon him from the woods, took him, pinioned his arms, and carried him off. They travelled in a northerly direction, and the same day arrived in some part of the township now called Canaan, then a wilderness. The Indians kindled a fire, and after binding their prisoner hand and foot, lay down to sleep. Griswold fortunately disengaging his hands and feet, while his arms were yet pinioned, seized their guns, and made his escape into the woods. After travelling a small distance, he sat down and waited till the dawn of day ; and although his arms were still pinioned he carried both the guns. The savages awoke in the morning and finding their prisoner gone, immediately pursued him ; they soon overtook him, and kept in sight of him the greater part of the day, while he was making his way homeward. When they came near, he turned and pointed one of his pieces at them ; they then fell back. In this manner he travelled till near sunset, when he reached an eminence in an open field about one mile north-west of the present Court House. He then discharged one of his guns, which immediately summoned the people to his assistance. The Indians fled, and Griswold safely returned to his family.

The capture of Griswold made the inhabitants more cautious for a while ; but their fears soon subsided. In the month of August following, Mr. Joseph Harris, a respectable inhabitant, was at work in the woods alone not far from the place where Griswold was taken ; and being attacked by a party of Indians, attempted to make his escape. The Indians pursued him ; and finding that they could not overtake him, they shot him dead and scalped him. As Harris did not return, the inhabitants were alarmed, and some search was made for him ; but the darkness of the night checked their exertions. The next morning they found his body, and gave it a decent burial. Harris was killed near the north end of the Plain, where the road turns to Milton, a little east of a school house now standing ; and for a long time after this plain was called Harris' Plain.* The place of his interment remained unmarked for more than a century, but rested in the memory of the older inhabitants. He was buried in the west burial ground, near the village of Litchfield. In 1830 a suitable monument, with an appropriate inscription, was erected at his grave by voluntary contribution.

The summer of 1724, was a period of excitement and alarm. The war between the English and the French, was then prevailing, and the latter used great efforts to incite the northern Indians, to attack the frontier settlements of the whites. "The conduct of the Indians at the north and west during this year, and especially their hostile movements in the vicinity of Litchfield, induced the government to take such precautionary measures as the occasion demanded, in order to furnish protection to the weak and exposed settlements. A line of scouts was established, extending from Litchfield to Turkey Hills, curving around the most northerly and westerly settlements in Simsbury.

On the 4th of June 1724, Capt. Richard Case, of Simsbury, was directed to employ ten men on this scouting party, to rendezvous at Litchfield. The men employed in this service were sergeant Jonathan Holcomb, John Hill, Nathaniel Holcomb, Joseph Mills, William Buell, Samuel Pettibone, Joseph Wilcoxson, Benajah Humphrey, Nathaniel Westover, and Charles Humphrey; all belonging to Simsbury. They continued in the service until early in October.”*

* Morris' Statistical account of Litchfield.

During these difficulties some of the more timid of the Inhabitants deserted their posts, and the interposition of the Legislature was deemed necessary, and therefore the following enactment was passed, viz :

“A General Court holden at New-Haven, Oct. 11, 1724.— Upon the Memorial of the Inhabitants of the Town of Litchfield, Bee it Enacted and Ordained, by the Governor, Assistants, and Deputies in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, that whosoever hath or ought to have been an Inhabitant and is a proprietor of any of the Lands within the said Town of Litchfield, or have deserted and left said Town since difficulties have arisen there on the account of an Enemy, and shall neglect for the space of one month after the rising of this Assembly to return to the said Town and there abide, or send some man in their room and stead to perform and doe the necessary duties of watching and warding and the like during the continuance of the difficulties of the warr, shall loose and forfeit all their right and estate in and upon any and all of the Lands aforesaid, and their estate, right and interest therein unto the Corporation of Connecticut. And further, it is provided, that if any other man being now a proprietor and Inhabitant, or a proprietor and ought to have been an Inhabitant in the said Town, shall hereafter during the continuance of fear and danger of the enemy, desert and leave the said Town, or neglect to repair thither and there personally abide, without constantly providing some other sufficient person in his room and stead, there to perform all duties as before-mentioned in the case of them who have already deserted, shall likewise forfeit their estates in and on all the lands in the Town aforesaid unto this Corporation. And further, it is provided that upon complaint made to the Committee of Warr at Hartford of or against any such deserter, upon their satisfaction of the truth thereof, the said Committee shall declare the forfeiture, and the said Committee are enabled to admit any other person who shall goe and abide there in the room of the deserter and perform the necessary duties as aforesaid, and that he shall hereafter receive a grant from this Court of the estate escheated as aforesaid for his further confirmation therein. And it is further, Ordered that five shillings per week shall be allowed for billeting souldiers in Litchfield for the Summer last past."

CHAPTER VI.

One of the earliest public measures of our pious forefathers was the construction of a convenient edifice for the public worship of God. "In April 1723, the inhabitants voted to build their first Church; and the house was finished within three years. It was built in a plain manner and without a steeple. Its dimensions were 45 feet in length and 35 in breadth." "At the raising of this building all the adult males in the whole township sat on the sills at once."* The Church stood in, and a little north of the center of, Meeting-House Street, and nearly opposite the northern extremity of Town Hill Street as it now runs. It was perhaps in view of the construction of this building that the following vote was passed on the 9th day of December 1723, viz :

"Voted that whosoever shall sell or transept any pine boards out of the Town, shall forfeit ten shillings per thousand, and in the same proportion for less or bigger quantities; one half to the complainer, the other half into the town tresuery."

In 1662 the second church was completed, and was erected on nearly the same ground occupied by the first. By a vote of the town it was to be 60 feet in length, 45 in width, with steeple. In 1829, the present Church of the 1st Ecclesiastical Society was finished, when the second church erected was taken down.

The members of the Church of England in this town, associated together for public worship about the year 1746, and it appears from their records that the Episcopal Society "was organized according to law, on the 26th of October, A. D. 1784." Their first Church was erected nearly opposite the carriage manufactory of Mr. William Lord, about one mile westerly from the Court House. Their Church in the village was completed in the year 1812.

The Church of the Methodist Episcopal Society in this village, was erected in the year 1836.

The west Burial Ground near the village, was reserved for that purpose at the first settlement of the Town. The east Burial Ground was laid out in 1754; and in 1767, the town granted by vote, "the use and improvement of it to Timothy Marsh during the Town's pleasure."

The first inhabitants of the Town, were peculiarly careful that none but persons of good character, should be permitted to settle among them. If a stranger made a purchase in the plantation, a proviso was sometimes inserted in the deed, that the Inhabitants should accept of the purchaser, and that he should "run the risk of trouble from the Grand Committee."

On the 1st of April 1724, it was "voted that the Commitee of hartford and Windsor Chouce Inhabitance. In Case any new are Brought into town, and the town Judge them not holsome, then to be Judged by Indifrant men, and by them Judged Good inhabitance, the cost to be paid by Litchfield, if not the Cost to be paid by the Commite that made Choice of said Inhabitantse."

Bounties were paid for the destruction of Wolves, Snakes, &c. On the 16th of May 1740, it was "Voted that whosoever shall Kill and Distroy any Rattle Snakes, within the bounds of the town, any time before the tenth day of December next, bringing the tayl and som of the flesh to any one of the Selectmen of the town, shall have three pence for each snake."

And for the encouragement of Fisheries, it was on the 12th of April 1779, "on request of Capt. John Marsh, consented, (by vote,) that he might have the exclusive Pickerel Fishing in the Loon Pond, (so called,) for the space of twenty years next after this day, provided he shall at his own expense procure Pickerel to breed and propagate therein, in a reasonable time." It seems however, that no advantage was taken of this privilege. Twenty-eight Pickerel were first procured in the winter of 1809, from a Pond in Southwick, Mass., and put into Cranberry or Loon Pond. Their progeny have so increased, that they are now taken in great quantities in all the Lakes in the Township, and they are the most valuable Fish in our waters. Our Lakes are Great Lake, the largest in the State, covering about nine hundred acres; Mount Tom Pond lying partly in Washington, seventy-two acres; Little Pond, fifteen acres; Cranberry Pond, eight acres. Adjoining some of these Lakes, is a large tract of low meadow containing about five hundred acres, which is apparently alluvial. This land was highly esteemed by the first settlers; so much did they value it, that in making a division of the Township, only four acres of this meadow were at first allotted to each Right. It is said, that for the purpose of destroying the timber then growing upon these meadows, by flooding, a dam was thrown across the outlet of the Great Lake, in consequence of which the fever and ague prevailed to a great extent. Since the dam was removed, it is doubtful whether a case of that character ever originated in the Township. The quality of the meadows is greatly depreciated, by reason, as has been supposed, of the fact that the dam of the old Paper Mill near the Jambs, (so called,) for many years obstructed in some degree the drainage of the meadows.

Our highest mountain is Mount Tom, which is about seven hundred feet perpendicular height above the river at its base on the south side.

"The lands in this Town afforded better hunting ground for the Indians than extensive intervals. Many of the hills were nearly cleared of trees by fires kindled for the purpose of hunting."

The Inhabitants of the Town, are mostly natives of this

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the cold. It was a sharp, biting cold that seemed to penetrate my coat. I shivered as I walked towards the building, my hands tucked into my pockets. The air was thick with the scent of old stone and the distant hum of city traffic. I had heard that the place was haunted, but I didn't believe it until now.

The building itself was a masterpiece of gothic architecture, with its dark stone walls and pointed arch windows. The entrance was a grand affair, with a large set of steps leading up to a heavy wooden door. I hesitated for a moment before pushing the door open, the sound of the hinges creaking in the silence. Inside, the air was even colder, and the light was dim, coming from a few flickering candles.

I walked deeper into the building, my footsteps echoing on the cold floor. The walls were covered in tapestries and paintings, some of which I recognized from old books. The atmosphere was eerie, with shadows lurking in the corners and a sense of being watched. I tried to shake the feeling off, but it was impossible. The more I explored, the more I felt like I was intruding on something ancient and powerful.

As I reached the end of the hall, I noticed a door that was slightly ajar. I pushed it open and stepped into a room that was unlike any I had ever seen before. The room was filled with books, but not just any books. These were old, leather-bound volumes that seemed to contain secrets of great importance. I reached for one of the books, my fingers brushing against the cold cover.

Just as I was about to open it, a soft light appeared in the distance, and a figure emerged from the shadows. It was a woman, her face pale and her eyes dark. She looked at me with a mixture of fear and anger, and I knew that I had just discovered something that I should not have.

She spoke to me in a low, husky voice, her words filled with a power that I could not understand. She told me that I was not the first to come here, and that I was not the last. She said that I had been chosen for a purpose, and that I must now accept my fate. I tried to run, but she was faster than I was, and she caught me before I could escape.

She held me by the shoulders, her grip firm and unyielding. She looked into my eyes and saw the fear, the confusion, and the hope. She knew that I was a good person, and that I could be of use to her. She told me that I must stay here, and that I must do as she said. I knew that I had no choice, and I nodded my head in agreement.

She led me to a small room at the end of the hall, and she told me that this was my home. She gave me a bed, a desk, and a chair, and she told me that I must work hard to earn my keep. She said that I must learn the secrets of the building, and that I must use them to help her. I knew that this was a great responsibility, but I also knew that I was up to the task.

The days passed in a blur, and I became a part of the building. I learned the secrets of the books, and I used them to help the woman. She was a powerful figure, and she trusted me with her secrets. I knew that I was in a dangerous place, but I also knew that I was in a place of great power. I was a part of something ancient and powerful, and I was proud to be a part of it.

One day, the woman called me to her room. She looked at me with a serious expression, and she told me that it was time for me to leave. She said that I had learned enough, and that I must now go and use what I had learned. I knew that this was the end of my time here, and I felt a mix of sadness and relief. I packed my things and said goodbye to the woman, who gave me a look of approval.

I walked out of the building, the cold air hitting my face. I knew that I would never forget this place, and I knew that I would always be a part of it. I was a part of something great, and I was proud to have been a part of it.

State, and many boast of their descent from the Puritans of New England.

“The manners and customs of the first settlers were plain and simple. Their clothing was of their own domestic manufacture; and their food of their own raising. Foreign luxuries were scarcely made use of till about the year 1750. Their amusements were of the most athletic kind.” “The first use of the violin in this town for a dance was in the year 1748. The whole expense of the amusement, although the young people generally attended, did not exceed one dollar; out of which the fiddler was paid. When this instance of profusion took place, parents and old people exclaimed, that they should be ruined by the extravagance of the youth. In the year 1798 a Ball, with the customary entertainment and variety of music, cost $160, and nothing was said about it. Such has been the difference in the manners of Litchfield within half a century.”*

Slavery can hardly be said to have existed in this town, during the present century, and it has for years been extinct. In the year 1800, only seven blacks were accounted slaves, though some born such are still living. During the eighteenth century, however, it existed here in a mild form, as it did in other parts of the State. The records of Wills and Distributions, show, that a considerable proportion of the personal estate of the most opulent of our early settlers consisted of negro servants.

Formerly, by a law of this State, if debtors had no other means to pay their debts, they were assigned in service for that purpose. And it is said to have been common for poor foreigners, who could not pay their passage money, to stipulate with the Captain of the Ship, that he might assign them to raise the money. Persons so assigned, were called Redemptioners, and several were so held in service in this town. Among them was Matthew Lyon, a native of Ireland, who was assigned to Hugh Hannah, of Litchfield, for a pair of stags, valued at £12. Lyon was afterwards a Member of Congress from Vermont, and from Kentucky. He was convicted under the famous alien and sedition law, and fined. The fine was subsequently remitted by Congress, to him or his heirs.

"There has been but one instance of murder in this Town, since its first settlement, and that was perpetrated by John Jacob, an Indian, upon another Indian in the month of February, 1768. The murderer was executed the same year.*

There have been but three executions in this town for capital offences; and these include all which have taken place in the County of Litchfield. The first was the Indian above named. The second was a man by the name of Barnet Davenport, a native of New Milford, convicted of both murder and arson. He was executed on the 8th day of May, 1780, aged twenty years.

This murder, taken with all the attending circumstances, was one of the most inhuman, atrocious, and horrible deeds ever perpetrated in New England. From the criminal's own confession, it appears that his parentage and early education, were exactly calculated to produce his wicked life, and tragical end. Untutored and unrestrained by parental government, he was left to grow up at random. In the morning of life, no morality was inculcated on him, and no sense of religion, either by precept or example. On the contrary he was from early years, unprincipled, profane, and impious. Before he was nine years old, he was expert in cursing and swearing, and an adept at mischief. At eleven years he began to pilfer; at thirteen he stole money; at fifteen he entertained thoughts of murder, and rapidly waxed harder and bolder in wickedness. At nineteen he actually murdered a family in cold blood. As a friendless, wandering stranger, he was taken into the house of Mr. Caleb Mallory, of Washington, and treated with the utmost kindness, in the month of December, 1779. Scarcely had two months elapsed, before the murder was determined upon. The night of the 3d of February, 1780, was fixed on to execute the horrid purpose. With a heart hard as adamant, he lighted a candle, went into the lodging room of his benefactors, and beat them to death with a club. A little grand-child, being with its grand-parents, shared the same fate; and two others were left in sound sleep to perish in the flames. Having kindled a fire in three of the rooms, he fled, after robbing the house of its most valuable articles, from the murdered family and burning house. But from an accusing conscience, and from the hand of justice, which followed hard upon his steps, he was unable to flee. He was taken, and executed by the sentence of court, the May ensuing, at Litchfield.

* Some years since, when rebuilding a house on the Harwinton Turnpike road, near Spruce Brook, formerly occupied by one Graves, the workmen, under the bedroom floor, disinterred the bones of a man in very good preservation. It was supposed that the remains were those of a pedlar or fiddler who had been murdered. A Court of Enquiry was held, but the investigation did not lead to the discovery of the murderer. Some suspicious circumstances seemed to point out the guilty person, but enough was not proved to justify his arrest.

The third was a man named Goss, for murdering his wife, in one of the northern towns of this County. The sentence of death was pronounced upon an inhabitant, though not a native of this town, named Washburn, for bestiality, in the year 1801.* But the evening before the day appointed for his execution, he put an end to his own life by taking laudanum."† In 1832, Robert Cantine of Goshen, was tried here for the murder of his wife, was convicted, and sentenced to be hung. Owing however to certain mitigating circumstances, his sentence was commuted by the Legislature, to imprisonment for life in the State Prison. In 1835, Agostinho Rabello, a native of Portugal, was indicted for the murder of a lad in Washington, named Ferris Beardslee. He was acquitted by the Jury, solely on the ground of insanity. Rabello was subsequently confined for safe keeping, in our County Prison, and afterwards by special act of the Legislature, in the State Prison.

* It was in 1799.

CHAPTER VII.

Few towns in the State so far inland, suffered more in proportion to their population, than Litchfield, during the Revolutionary War. Almost every man of suitable age and ability was ready and willing to aid in person and otherwise, our infant Republic in its struggles for existence. With few exceptions, the purest Patriotism pervaded all, attended with a perfect understanding of their Chartered Rights and Privileges. Their hearts were loyal to their sovereign, but they would not submit to Tyranny, and were prompt to sustain their brethren in other Colonies, in resistance to unconstitutional oppression.

The spirit manifest in the following proceedings of this Town, (drawn up by Gov. Wolcott, a signer of the Declaration of Independence,) upon the blockade of Boston, before the War of the Revolution, renders them worthy of remembrance.

“The Inhabitants of Litchfield, in legal Town Meeting assembled, on the 17th day of August 1774, taking into consideration the Distress to which the Poor of the Town of Boston, may likely be reduced, by the operation of an Act of the British Parliament, for Blocking up their Port, and deeply commiserating the unhappiness of a brave and loyal People, who are thus eminently suffering in a General Cause, for vindicating what every virtuous American considers an essential Right of this Country, think it is their indispensable Duty, to afford their unhappy distressed brethren of said Town of Boston, all reasonable Aid and Support; and this they are the more readily induced to do, not only as the Inhabitants of said Town are thus severely condemned for their reluctance to submit to an arbitrary, an unconsented to, and consequently unconstitutional Taxation, but the whole of the great and loyal Province of the Massachusetts Bay, have been condemned unheard, in the loss of their Charter Privileges, by the heretofore unknown and unheard of exertions of Parliamentary Powers, which they conceive is a Power claimed and exercised in such a manner as cannot fail of striking every unprejudiced mind with Horror and Amazement, as being subversive of all those inherent, essential and Constitutional Rights, Liberties and Privileges, which the good people of this Colony have ever held sacred, and even dearer than Life itself, nor ever can wish to survive; not only every idea of Property, but every emolument of civil life, being thereby rendered precarious and uncertain.

In full confidence therefore, that no Degree of Evil thus inflicted on said Town and province, will ever induce them to give up or betray their own and the American constitutional Rights and Privileges, especially as they cannot but entertain the most pleasing Expectations, that the Committees of the several North American Provinces, who are soon to meet at Philadelphia, will in their wisdom, be able to point out a Method of Conduct, effectual for obtaining Redress of their grievances, a method to which, (when once agreed upon by said Committee) this Town will look upon it their duty strictly to attend. And in the mean time earnestly recommend, that subscriptions be forthwith opened in this Town, under the care of Reuben Smith, Esq., Capt. Lynde Lord, and Mr. William Stanton, who are hereby appointed a Committee to receive and forward to the Selectmen of Boston, for the use of the Poor in that place, all such Donations as shall be thereupon made for that purpose; as also to correspond with the Committee of Correspondence there or elsewhere, as there may be occasion.

We also take this opportunity publicly to return our thanks to the members of the Honorable House of Representatives of this Colony, for their patriotic and loyal Resolutions, passed and published in the last Assembly on the occasion, and order them to be entered at large on the public Records of this Town, that succeeding ages may be faithfully furnished with authentic Credentials of our inflexible attachment to those inestimable Privileges, which we and every honest American glory in esteeming our unalienable Birthright and Inheritance."

Upon the commencement of the War, this Town with vigor entered into the contest. The principal business at Town Meetings for several years, seems to have been the adoption of measures to sustain the cause, and to carry into effect the orders and acts of the Council of Safety, and of the Legislature; soldiers were encouraged to enlist ; their pay was guaranteed by the Town ; bounties were granted them ; provisions were provided for their Families, and clothing for the soldiers. In the year 1777, eight continental Battalions were raised in this State, of which the Quota belonging to this Town was 92.

A large proportion of those taken Prisoners at Fort Washington, were from this Town ; about thirty of whom died in the Prison ships, and other Prisons in New York. Throughout the War, our young men were constantly enlisted into the Army. The Militia were fully organized, and drafts were continually made upon them. In times of alarm they would turn out almost en masse. Our Litchfield Troops, were found at the capture of New York, on the Connecticut coast, on the Hudson, at Boston, at Ticonderoga, and Crown Point, at the surrenders of Burgoyne and Cornwallis, the capture of Stoney Point, in the Battles of White Plains, Trenton, and Princeton, and in almost every military transaction, worthy of note, during the eventful struggle.

“ We recently had put into our hands several MSS., left by the late Col. BEZALEEL BEEBE, of Litchfield, from which we glean the following facts and names. The annexed document, which sufficiently explains itself, contains the autographs of each individual whose name is attached to it. This regiment, which, it will be seen, was raised previous to the Declaration of Independence, was designed for the defence of New York. When it was known that Capt. Beebe had received orders to raise a company for that service, the enthusiasm of the Whigs was unbounded. A veteran who died within the last few years, stated that when the news reached him, he started on a run for the captain's head quarters, fearing the roll would be full before he arrived. Capt. B. received his orders on a Sunday, and by the following Saturday, the company had been raised, armed and equipped, and were on the march toward Fairfield.

We the Subscribers being convinced of the Necessity of a body of Forces to defeat certain Wicked Purposes, formed by the Instruments of Ministerial Tyranny, do solemnly engage ourselves and Inlist as Private Soldiers, in a Regiment to be Commanded by Col. Andrew Ward, Jr., under the command of Maj'r General Lee, for the Term of Eight Weeks at the utmost, from the Day we March from Fairfield, which is the place of Rendevouz ; the Hon'ble Maj'r General Lee having Given his Word and Honor, that we shall not be Detained a single Day after said Term.

Those who have a knowledge of the leading men in Litchfield county fifty or sixty years ago, will recognize in the above list, the names of many of her most prominent and influential citizens—men of wealth and enterprise, who, though surrounded by the endearments of domestic life, voluntarily enlisted as private soldiers in that dangerous expedition. They were mainly from the towns of Litchfield, Torrington, Goshen and Warren, and were all enlisted from the 21st to the 25th of January.

At a later date of the same year, (1776,) thirty-six picked men were placed under command of Capt. Beebe, to aid in the defence of Fort Washington, near New York. On the 16th of November, as is well known, the Fort, after a desperate resistance on the part of its defenders, fell into the hands of the British, and all the Americans were either killed or made prisoners. The subsequent treatment and sufferings of the prisoners, (who were confined in the Sugar House and on board the prison-ships,) is perhaps without a parallel in the history of the wars of any civilized nation. Crowded into a narrow space, without air, and for the first two days without food, contagion and death was the natural consequence. The dysentary, small pox, and other terrible diseases broke out among them, and very few of the whole number survived the terrible ordeal. On the 27th of December, an exchange of persons took place ; but only eight of those who survived, (viz. Marsh, Woodruff, R. Loomis, B. Beach, N. Beach, Marshall, Brunson and Benedict, were able to sail for Connecticut,—four of whom, (Marsh, B. Beach, Marshall and Loomis,) died on the way. The remainder of those who were living at that date, being too sick to be removed, were left behind, where all, with a single exception, (Sergt. He was not exchanged with other prisoners, but was confined within the 'limits' for about a year, at his own expense."

I have recently found a Deposition made on the the 3d of May, 1777, before Andrew Adams, Esq., J. P., by Mr. Thomas Catlin, of this Town, (the Father of Doct. Abel Catlin,) who was a Lieutenant in the American Army at New York in 1776. Lieut. Catlin gives this account, in substance, of the treatment of himself and others by the British, viz :

That he was taken a Prisoner by the British Troops on New York Island, Sept. 15, 1776, and confined with a great number in close Gaol, eleven days ; that he had no sustenance for forty-eight hours after he was taken, that for eleven whole days they had only about two days allowance, and their Pork.

was offensive to the smell. That forty-two were confined in one house, till Fort Washington was taken, when the house was crowded with other Prisoners. After which they were informed they should have two-thirds allowance, which consisted of very poor Irish Pork, Bread hard, mouldy and wormy, made of canail and dregs of flax seed. That the British Troops had good bread. Brackish water was given to the Prisoners, and he had seen $1 50 given for a common pail of water. Only between three and four lbs. of Pork was given three men for three days. That for near three months, the private soldiers were confined in the Churches, and in one were eight hundred and fifty. That about the 25th of December, 1776, he and about two hundred and twenty-five others, were put on board the Glasgow at New York, to be carried to Connecticut for exchange. They were on board eleven days, and kept on black coarse broken bread, and less pork than before. Twenty-eight died during the eleven days! They were treated with great cruelty, and had no fire for sick or well. They were crowded between decks, and many died through hardship, ill usage, hunger and cold.

The following facts appear in a letter written by Doct. Reuben Smith, dated at Litchfield, May 12th, 1777, relating to the Danbury alarm, &c. :

"Sunday morning, 27th April, about one o'clock, we were alarmed; our people turned out spiritedly; came up with rear of the enemy about eleven the next day, a little below Wilton Meeting House, and pursued them aboard their ships. Paul Peck was killed in the last attack on the enemy. Levi Peck, Thomas Peck's son, was wounded in the shoulder about the same time; in Wilton, Ozias Goodwin was wounded in the arm, and Salmon Buel had one of his thighs broken, and the other shot through with the same ball.

The infamous Daniel Griswold, came into the western part of the Town, the morning before the alarm, and was there concealed till Monday, and took off to join the ministerial army, David Kilborn, Benjamin Kilborn's son Cha's, Isaac Kilborn's son Abraham, and Samuel Kilborn son to Giles Kilborn, Jonathan Smith, Jr., and his brother Elisha, (who was enlisted in the light horse,) David Joy, Ephraim Bates, Benjamin Doolittle, Josiah Stone, and John Davies' youngest son David, and one John Beach of Woodbury who lived at Josiah Stone's.

The Wednesday following they were taken, (except Benjamin Doolittle, and Charles Kilborn, who it is said were killed in attempting to escape,) and were carried to Derby, where they were tried by a Court Martial, and Griswold was sentenced to be hanged ; which sentence was executed the Monday following, at New Haven. The rest were pardoned, upon their enlisting into the Continental Army during the War.

Governor Franklin, is confined in our Gaol, and a constant Guard is kept. We trust he will find it difficult to escape, should he attempt it. I understand, he utterly denies the charge of dispensing Pardons and Protections."

Of Paul Peck, alluded to in the Letter of Doct. Smith, it is said, "he was the most expert hunter of the time in which he lived. At the Danbury Alarm, he put his large Gun in order, and followed the enemy to Compo, on their retreat, and took a station behind a stone wall, and every shot told, until he was rushed upon by the enemy, who took his gun from him and dashed his brains out with it." He was killed April 28th, 1777, aged about seventy-five years.

During the War, Litchfield was a place of deposite, for Provisions, and other Continental Stores. Workshops for the Army were established here, and Prisoners of War were confined in our Prison.

Mr. Matthews, the English Mayor of New York, was here as a prisoner of War. The first pleasure carriage, [a chair,] brought into this Town, was by him presented to Mrs. Major Seymour, whose husband had the custody of the Mayor, and was in use as lately as A. D. 1812. The Mayor's Travelling Trunk, is still in this town in the possession of one of Major Seymour's descendants. Mr. Franklin, the gentleman spoken of by Doct. Smith as being confined in our Gaol, was the British Governor of New Jersey.

An Equestrian statue of King George the 3d was during the War transported to Litchfield, to be cast into Bullets for the use of our army. The Statue was imported from London. Among the Archives of the British Government, Mr. John Romeyn Brodhead, the agent of the State of New York to procure Documents in Europe relative to the Colonial History of that State, recently found Letters giving an account of the erection of the Statue and of its demolition, from which I make the following extracts, viz :

Extract from a Letter from Lieut. Gov. Cadwallader Colden to Lord Hillsborough. Dated New-York, August 18, 1770.

“An equestrian guilt statue of the King, made by direction of, and purchased by this Colony, came over in one of the last ships from London. On Thursday last it was opened to view, erected on its proper pedestal, in a square near the Fort, and fronting the principal street of the city. I was attended on this occasion by the gentlemen of the Council, and members of Assembly, then in town, the magistrates of the city, the clergy of all denominations, and a very large number of the principal inhabitants. Our Loyalty, firm attachment and affection to his Majesty's person was expressed by drinking the King's health, and a long continuance of his reign, under a discharge of 32 pieces of cannon, a band of music playing at the same time from the ramparts of the fort. The General and officers of the army gave us the honor of their company on the occasion. The whole company walked in procession from the fort, round the statue, while the spectators expressed their joy by loud acclamations, and the procession having returned with me to the fort, the ceremony concluded with great cheerfulness and good humour.”

The whole armament destined for this part of America, except the last division of the Hessians, being now assembled here, I expect, by the courage and strength of this noble army, tyranny will be crushed and legal government restored."

Tyranny was indeed crushed and legal government restored, but not precisely in the manner anticipated by Gov. Tryon.

A paper read before the New-York Historical Society, in October 1844, by George Gibbs, Esq., gives this further account of the representative of his Majesty.

"ACCOUNT OF THE STATUE OF GEORGE III., FORMERLY STANDING IN THE BOWLING GREEN, NEW YORK.

Most of the members are probably aware that an equestrian statue of King George III. stood upon the Bowling Green, in this city, prior to the Revolution, and was overthrown soon after its commencement. I believe, however, that its subsequent fate has never been recorded, and having in my possession a paper giving authentic information on the subject, I have supposed that the royal effigy might be worth a brief obituary.

Holt's (New York) Gazette, as quoted by Mr. Dunlap, gives the following notice of its erection :

'August 21st, 1770, being the birth day of Prince Frederick, the father of George III., an elegant equestrian statue of his present Majesty, George III. was erected in the Bowling Green, near Fort George. On this occasion the members of his Majesty's Council, the City Corporation, the Corporation of the Chamber of Commerce, the Corporation of the Marine Society, and most of the gentlemen of the City and army waited on his honor, the Lieutenant Governor C. Colden, in the Fort, at his request ; when his Majesty's and other loyal healths were drank under a discharge of thirty-two pieces of cannon, from the Battery, accompanied with a band of music. This beautiful statue is made of metal, (Dunlap says by way of parenthesis, 'the writer did not on such an occasion like to say what metal represented his royal majesty, the best of Kings ; it was lead') being the first equestrian one of his present majesty, and is the workmanship of that celebrated statuary, Mr. Wilton of London.'

 The twenty-fourth is the fact that the

Symptoms of disloyalty, betokening revolution I presume, soon manifested themselves in the rude treatment of the effigy, for on the 6th February, 1773, (13th Geo. III. Ch. 1580,) an act was passed 'to prevent the defacing the statues which are erected in the city of New York.'

Upon the above account of Holt's, Mr. Dunlap observes :

'This statue stood till sometime in 1776. I saw it in 1775. In 1776 it was thrown down, and tradition says converted into bullets to resist his gracious majesty's soldiers when sent to enforce the doctrine of 'the sovereignty of British Parliament over the Colonies in all cases whatsoever,' the doctrine of Mr. Pitt, Lord Chatham, which he died in an effort to enforce. The pedestal stood until long after the Revolution. No fragment of the horse or his rider was ever seen after its overthrow, and so completely had the memory of this event (the erecting the only equestrian statue ever set up in New York) been lost, that I have never found a person who could tell me on what occasion it was ordered, or when placed in the Bowling Green.'

In fact so much was the statue forgotten. that Watson in his sketches (p. 30,) has entirely mistaken the personage represented. Speaking of the overthrow, he says with a curious revival of tory feeling : 'My friend, Mr. John Baylie was present in April, '76, and saw the degrading spectacle. He saw no decent people present ; a great majority were shouting boys. The insult, if so meant, was to the dead, as the statue was of George II., our most gracious King.'

Some cotemporary notices of the destruction of this effigy have been pointed out to me, which I will cite, and which will show that Watson was wrong not merely as to the person, but as to the time of its occurrence, which was immediately after the news of the declaration of Independence. The first is from a book of general orders issued by Washington, the original of which is in the possession of the Society. It is as follows :

‘July 10. Tho’ the General doubts not the persons who pulled down and mutilated the statue in Broadway last night, acted in the public cause, yet it has so much the appearance of riot and want of order in the army, that he disapproves the manner and directs that in future these things shall be avoided by the soldiery and left to be executed by proper authority.’

The next is in a letter from Ebenezer Hazard to General Gates, dated July 12th, 1776, which will be found among the Gates papers, also in the Society’s Collection, and is as follows :

‘The King of England’s arms have been burned in Philadelphia and his statue here has been pulled down to make musket balls of, so that his troops will probably have melted majesty fired at them.’

Another is in a letter from New York, of July 11th, 1776, published in the New Hampshire Gazette of the 20th.

‘New York, July 11. Last Monday evening the equestrian statue of George III., with tory pride and folly raised in the year 1770, was by the Sons of Freedom laid prostrate in the dust, the just desert of an ungrateful tyrant. The lead wherewith this monument is made is to be run into bullets, to assimilate with the brains of our infatuated adversaries, who to gain a peppercorn, have lost an empire. Quem Deus vult perdere, prius dementat. A gentleman who was present at the ominous fall of leaden majesty, looking back to the original’s hopeful beginning, pertinently exclaimed in the language of the angel to Lucifer ‘If thou be’est he ; but ah, how fallen ! how changed ! !’

A note to this letter by the editor marks the allusion to Lord Clare’s declaration in Parliament, that a peppercorn in acknowledgement of Britain’s right to tax America, was of more importance than millions without it.

The destruction of the statue is also alluded to and incorrectly attributed to General Washington in a smutty tory production, entitled ‘The Battle of Brooklyn, a farce in two acts, as it was performed on Long Island, on Tuesday, the 27th day of August, 1776, by the Representatives of the Tyrants of America assembled at Philadelphia : New York, printed for J. Rivington, in the year of the Rebellion, 1776.’

Betty, a servant of 'Lady Gates,' is represented as complimenting General Washington in this wise :

Betty. 'Lord ! Lord ! mem, did he not make codfish of them all at Boston ! and has he not seen tory men rid upon rails at New York by the tailors and cobblers of the town ? And more, my Lady, did he not order the King's statue to be pulled down and the head cut off ? For God's sake, mem, what would'st have of a hero ?'

Lady G. 'Codfish at Boston ! It is really an odd term Betty ; but he did no more than that old fool Putnam would have done. His not forbidding that insult to humanity at New York, was countenancing an act of barbarism, and none but a little minded barbarian would have suffered the arts to be trampled under foot as he did, in the case of the king's statue.'

Mr. Stephen's (Incidents of Travel in Russia, &c., vol. 2, p. 23,) mentions having met with a curious memorial of its destruction, and at an out of the way place. This was a gaudy and flaring engraving in a black wooden frame, representing the scene of its destruction, which he found in a tavern at Chioff, in Russia. 'The grouping of the picture,' he says, 'was rude and grotesque, the ringleader being a long negro, stripped to his trowsers, and straining with all his might upon a rope, one end of which was fastened to the head of the statue and the other tied round his own waist, his white teeth and the whites of his eyes being particularly conspicuous on a heavy ground of black.' How this picture found its way to Russia, it would be difficult to imagine ; it would certainly be not less a curiosity here than there.

The document I have mentioned gives an account of its remaining history in a shape which history seldom assumes, that of an account current. It is preserved among the papers of General, afterwards Governor, Oliver Wolcott, of Connecticut. It is a statement of the number of cartridges made from the materials of the statue by the ladies of Litchfield, and is in these words :—

Mrs. Marvin,	3456 cartridges.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is not only one of the most important but also one of the most difficult in the history of science. The author then proceeds to a detailed examination of the various theories which have been proposed to explain the origin of life. These theories are divided into two main classes: the spontaneous generation theory and the biogenesis theory. The spontaneous generation theory, which is the older of the two, holds that life can arise from non-living matter. The biogenesis theory, on the other hand, holds that life can only arise from pre-existing life. The author then discusses the evidence in support of each theory and finally concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The second part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the biogenesis theory. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The third part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The fifth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The sixth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The seventh part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The eighth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The ninth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The tenth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed examination of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author begins by discussing the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. This evidence is shown to be very weak and is based on a number of faulty assumptions. The author then proceeds to discuss the evidence in support of the theory of biogenesis. This evidence is shown to be very strong and is based on a number of well-established facts. The author then concludes that the biogenesis theory is the more probable of the two.

The original account is in General Wolcott's hand writing, and is endorsed 'an account of the number of cartridges made.' There is no date to it, nor is there mention made by him of the fact of their being made from the statue, but a memorandum added by his son, the last Governor Wolcott, explains it as follows :—

“N. B. An equestrian statue of George the Third of Great Britain, was erected in the city of New York on the Bowling Green, at the lower end of Broadway; most of the materials were lead, but richly gilded to resemble gold. At the beginning of the revolution this statue was overthrown. Lead being then scarce and dear, the statue was broken in pieces, and the metal transported to Litchfield as a place of safety. The ladies of this village converted the lead into cartridges, of which the preceding is an account. O. W.’

The Mrs. and Miss Marvin and Mrs. Beach, mentioned in the paper, belonged to families who yet reside in Litchfield; the other persons named were the two daughters and the youngest son of General Wolcott.

Litchfield, it may be noticed, was, during the war, a place of great importance as a military depot. After the capture of New York by the British in 1776, all communication between New England and Pennsylvania was turned to the westward of the Highlands on the Hudson, and the troops and stores were usually passed through that village as a point on the most convenient route to the posts on the river yet in possession of the Americans. General Wolcott, who was a member of the Continental Congress, lived there, and during the intervals of his congressional attendance, was constantly occupied in raising troops to supply the requisitions of Washington, Putnam and Gates. It appears from his letters that he returned to Connecticut shortly after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, of which he was one of the signers, and it is probable that the statue was transported there at his instance, immediately after its destruction. Of its identity as the material for the cartridges above mentioned, there can be no doubt. The late Governor Wolcott, on graduating from Yale College in 1778, was appointed to an office in the quartermaster's department, under General Greene, and was posted at Litchfield, in charge of the stores there. His opportunity for knowing the fact, as mentioned in his note, was therefore certain. The late Hon. Judge Wolcott, moreover, who figures in the account as 'Frederick,' and who was a boy at the time, informed me a few years ago that he well remembered the circumstance of the statue being sent there, and that a shed was erected for the occasion in an apple orchard adjoining the house, where his father chopped it up with the wood axe, and the 'girls' had a frolic in running the bullets and making them up into cartridges. I suppose the alarm of the militia, on which some were distributed, was Tryon's invasion in 1777, when Danbury was burnt. On this occasion fourteen men, the last in Litchfield capable of bearing arms, were started at midnight to aid in repulsing the enemy.

The estimation in which lead was held in those days may be imagined from the fact that the above account of cartridges is filed carefully among returns of troops, accounts of requisitions upon the states, and issues of bills of credit.

This incident in revolutionary history might, had it found its way to him, have well barbed a shaft at King George from Peter Pindar's own bow; and we may suppose, from the grave attempts at waggery in the extracts above given, that a great deal of wit of one kind and another was expended on the occasion. I suspect that the monarch, could he have listened to the gossip over the melting ladle, might have exclaimed with Richard,

"Let not the heavens hear these tell tale women
Rail at the Lord's anointed." "

At a meeting of the Inhabitants of Litchfield, on the 6th of January 1778, to take into consideration the articles of Confederation, and perpetual Union, between the States, it was "Voted, unanimously, that the said articles of Confederation be approved, and that the Representatives of said Town be instructed to use their influence and vote in General Assembly, to invest the Delegates of this State, with competent powers ultimately in the name and behalf of this State, in Continental Congress, to subscribe and confirm the said articles of Confederation and perpetual Union between the said States."

It seems the sins of the children were visited upon their fathers.

"At a Town Meeting holden on the 25th of March, 1782, Stephen Stone, Elijah Griswold, and Benjamin Kilborn, having lately been assessed on examination by the Civil Authority and Selectmen, agreeably to Law, for each having a son gone to the enemy, and having requested a hearing in Town Meeting, and being heard accordingly, the question was proposed relative to said Stone in particular, and the Town by vote did not discharge said assessment."

At a Town Meeting 2d April 1782, "on the question whether Stephen Stone shall be acquitted from his assessment, &c., Voted in affirmative. Whereupon Elijah Griswold and Benjamin Kilborn, requesting the Town to release them from the assessment, Voted to raise the whole number of recruits required of this Town for continental service. by 'Tax,' &c.

From the State Records it appears that—

Aug. 1, 1776. Letters from the Convention of New-York sent by Mr. DePeyster, respecting the prisoners sent from New-York to Litchfield Jail were read ; and thereupon ordered that the Mayor of New-York should be brought to Hartford, and there confined. Gilbert Forbes and William Forbes were directed to be confined in Litchfield jail, and the other ten to be taken to Norwich jail.

Aug. 26, 1776. Last Monday, David Matthews, Mayor of the City of New-York, was brought from Litchfield, and on Friday was returned to Litchfield, to remain under the care of Capt. Moses Seymour.

Feb. 11, 1777. John Marsh 3d, of Litchfield, applied for liberty to take Mark Prindle of Harwinton, (a tory at Mansfield,) and him have before the Court at Litchfield, in discharge of his bail bond, given for said Prindle in another case ; which was granted by the Governor and Council, with their order to return said Prindle after his trial, to Amariah Williams in said Mansfield.

April 30, 1777. An order from Congress was received, to confine Gov. Franklin, without pen, ink, or paper ; and directed him to be conveyed under guard, by the Sheriff of Hartford County, forthwith to Litchfield jail.

Sept. 19, 1777. An order on the pay table was drawn in favor of Lynde Lord, Esq., for £100 towards the expense of the guard placed over Gov. Franklin.

Jan. 8, 1778. Upon the information of the State Attorney against John Marsh, a Cornet in a troop of horse under Capt. Moses Seymour, for disobedience of orders, the committee found the facts true as stated, and found that he had recently taken the oath of fidelity and declared his willingness to serve his country, risk his life and fortune in its defence, &c. The Assembly ordered said Marsh to pay the cost taxed at £8.14.5, and the complaint dismissed.

Jan. 8, 1778. The Assembly allowed Salmon Buell, of Litchfield, who was wounded in the Danbury expedition, by a ball in both his thighs, £60 for his relief.

CHAPTER VIII.

Not many years after the establishment of our National Independence, symptoms of disaffection to the arbitrary and cruel reign of Alcohol began to manifest themselves. But to the present generation belongs the honor of organizing an extended and regular force to repel his attacks. Many brilliant victories have been achieved, and it may reasonably be expected that the same generation will witness his final overthrow. Honor to those engaged in this struggle for a second Independence.

Below is a copy of the original pledge of a Temperance Association formed in Litchfield more than fifty years since. It shows at how early a day, public attention here was directed to the dreadful evils of Intemperance, and is interesting on account of its antiquity, and the number of distinguished men who adopted the pledge. Among the signers were men of wealth, integrity and benevolence, and some who have filled high places in our State and Nation.

“So many are the avenues leading to human misery, that it is impossible to guard them all. Such evils as are produced by our own folly and weakness are within our power to avoid. The immoderate use which the people of this State make of Distilled Spirits, is undoubtedly an evil of this kind. It is obvious to every person of the smallest observation, that from this pernicious practice follows a train of evils difficult to be enumerated. The morals are corrupted, property is exhausted, and health destroyed. And it is most sincerely to be regretted that from a mistaken idea that distilled spirits are necessary to laboring men, to counteract the influence of heat, and give relief from severe fatigue, that a most valuable class of citizens have been led to contract a habit of such dangerous tendency. Hence arises the inability to pay public taxes, to discharge private debts, and to support and educate families. Seriously considering this subject, and the frowns of Divine Providence in denying many families in this part of the country the means of a comfortable subsistence the present year, by failure of the principal crops of the earth; we think it peculiarly the duty of every good citizen to unite his efforts to reform a practice which leads so many to poverty, distress and ruin. Whereupon we do hereby associate, and mutually agree, that hereafter we will carry on our business without the use of distilled Spirits as an article of refreshment, either for ourselves, or those whom we employ, and that instead thereof, we will serve our workmen with wholesome food, and common simple drinks of our own production.

By Necessity and on Principle, in consequence of little experiment and much observation, I have effectually adopted and adhered to the salutary plan herein proposed during several months past, and am still resolved to persevere until convinced that any alteration will be productive of some greater good, whereof at present I have no apprehensions whilst Human Nature remains the same.

Litchfield, 9th May 1789.

In December 1785, the town voted to lease to the adjoining proprietors of the land on the west side of Town Street, a strip of land 24 feet in width from the west side of the highway, and that "one express and immutable condition on which said land shall be leased is, that no person shall have liberty on any pretense whatever, to erect any building thereon, other than a good handsome fence, and if any building should at any time be so set thereon, it shall be lawful for any person to demolish or remove the same." This strip is now occupied chiefly as court yards. Similar votes were subsequently passed relative to Meeting House Street.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is not only a scientific one, but also a philosophical one. The scientific aspect of the problem is concerned with the question of how life arose from non-life. The philosophical aspect is concerned with the question of whether life is a necessary part of the universe or whether it is a mere accident.

The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various theories of the origin of life. These theories are divided into two main groups: the theory of spontaneous generation and the theory of biogenesis. The theory of spontaneous generation is the older of the two and is based on the idea that life can arise from non-life. The theory of biogenesis is the newer of the two and is based on the idea that life can only arise from pre-existing life. The paper discusses the evidence for and against each of these theories and shows that the theory of biogenesis is the more plausible of the two.

The third part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various experiments that have been carried out to test the theory of spontaneous generation. These experiments have shown that life cannot arise from non-life under the conditions of the earth. This result is in agreement with the theory of biogenesis.

The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various experiments that have been carried out to test the theory of biogenesis. These experiments have shown that life can arise from pre-existing life under the conditions of the earth. This result is in agreement with the theory of biogenesis.

"Miss Sarah Pierce opened a School in this town for the instruction of Females, in the year 1792, which has very justly merited and acquired a distinguished reputation."* The school continued under her superintendence for nearly forty years, and its reputation has since been well sustained by her successors. It was incorporated in the year 1827, by the name of "The Litchfield Female Academy."

"The Hon. Tapping Reeve, one of the Judges of the Superior Court, commenced a Law School in Litchfield in the year 1784; and continued it, under his own tuition, till the year 1798. At this period, 210 young gentlemen had been students in his School, and qualified for admission to the Bar. In the year 1798, James Gould, Esq. became joint instructor with Judge Reeve; and from that time to March, 1812, 264 young gentlemen were educated here—in the whole, 474. Without doing injustice, it may be safe to remark, that the science of Law has been more systematically taught in this School, than in any other of the kind in the United States."*

Judge Reeve and Judge Gould continued to be joint instructors till the year 1820; after which, Judge Gould lectured alone, being assisted in examinations by the Hon. Jabez W. Huntington. Judge Gould closed his Lectures in the year 1833. More than 550 gentlemen received their professional education at this school after March 1812; making in the whole over 1024. This school always enjoyed a deservedly high reputation: such as the talents and extensive legal attainments of the gentlemen who conducted the institution were calculated to give it. Young gentlemen from every section of our nation were educated here, and not a few have been distinguished as Statesmen and Jurists.

The village of Litchfield was incorporated in May 1818, and by its charter has the usual powers and privileges of a Borough. Its limits are about one mile and three fourths in length, north and south, and about one mile in breadth, east and west.

A Branch of the Phoenix Bank at Hartford, was established here in the year 1814.

* Morris' Statistical Account.

The "Litchfield Mutual Fire Insurance Company" was incorporated in the year 1833.

The present Court House was erected in the years 1797 and 1798, and the present Goal and County House in the year 1812.

A few years since, "an Indian relic was found about half a mile east of the Court House, near Bantam River. It is a rude sculpture of brown stone, nearly the size of life, representing a female with head and shoulders, and extending down to the waist. It is now deposited at Yale College, New-Haven."

CHAPTER IX.

In May 1740, the Inhabitants of SOUTH FARMS petitioned the Legislature, to be annexed to the north Society of Woodbury, (now Bethlem.) A committee of the Town was appointed to oppose it, and the application was unsuccessful. Several attempts were made to procure their incorporation as an Ecclesiastical Society, which did not succeed till 1767, when an act of the Legislature for that purpose was passed. In 1753, there were but thirty families in the parish: when it was incorporated it contained seventy.

But the Legislature long before that time, granted the Inhabitants power to maintain the public worship of God among them for three months during the winter, and this right was called the "Winter Privilege."

They thereupon exercised the ordinary powers of an Ecclesiastical Society. Their first meeting for such purposes was holden on the 23d Nov. 1748, at the house of Capt. Thomas Harrison. Josiah Strong was chosen Moderator, and Jacob Woodruff, Clerk. Their meetings were warned by posting notices on trees in different parts of the Society. Their preachers, before the settlement of Mr. Beckwith, were, the Rev. Messrs. Bartlet, Dickeson, Heaton, Richards, Eells, Hart, &c. And Public Worship was held in different sections, at the School and Private Houses. The first School House was voted to be built in 1747: £20 was given from the Town Treasury for that purpose. In 1747, liberty was granted by the Town, to the inhabitants of South Farms, to have one fourth of an acre of ground laid out by the select men for a Burial Ground.

“The first person buried in South Farms, was interred in the month of March, 1749, viz : Mr. James Stoddard ; he was killed at the raising of a dwelling house.”

The orthography of those days was somewhat peculiar. On the 14th of March 1750, the Society “voted, to pay Charles Woodruff six shillings for y^e Bears to carry y^e dead.”

The sancity of burial places formerly seems not to have been very highly regarded. In 1776, the Town empowered the select men to buy of Mr. Thomas Waugh, half an acre about 20 rods south of Joseph Waugh's dwelling house, for a public burying place, and in case said Thomas gave a deed, the Town voted, that “said Thomas Waugh his heirs and assigns shall have good right forever to enclose said Burying Yard, and use it for pasturing, provided, he or they shall keep up and maintain convenient bars for the people to pass and repass, for the purpose of burying their dead.”

In 1761 the General Assembly resolved, that the inhabitants of South Farms, “be allowed to have the Gospel preached among them for four months in the winter season, and shall have liberty to build a meeting house.” And in 1764 they voted to “build a winter house thirty-five feet long, twenty-five feet wide, nine feet posts, provided Justus Gibbs will do it for £70 10, &c.” The house was soon after erected, is still in existence, and is occupied as a dwelling-house. By a resolve of the General Assembly, the 1st Society was required to repay to South Farms Society, what they had paid towards building the new meeting house in Litchfield. The South Farms Society also demanded of the 1st Society, a share of the parsonage money, with what success I am not informed.

In 1769 it was “voted, That we think the sealing ordinances are equally sacred, and any person that is qualified for one is qualified for both.” And in 1770, “voted, That we approve of the Church vote, viz : That conversion, should not be a term of admission for Church communion." This rule has long been abrogated. In 1785, the society built a new Church of liberal dimensions. In April of that year, the Society "voted, That the meeting house committee shall have good right to furnish Rum, Grindstones, and Ropes sufficient for framing the meeting house according to their best discretion." And in June of the same year, the Society appointed an overseer, to direct the issue of Liquor at the raising, and "voted, That the overseer shall give two drams per day to the spectators, one a little before noon, the other a little before night." They entered upon the work with such spirit, that the house was finished in twenty weeks after they began the frame. A steeple was soon after added, and a bell procured. This Church was occupied till the year 1844, when it was taken down, and a neat and tasteful edifice was erected in more modern style.

The once celebrated "Morris Academy," was established in South Farms by James Morris, Esq., in 1790.

"The parish of NORTHFIELD, was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly, at their October session in the year 1794. This parish is situated in the South-east corner of Litchfield, and it includes within its limits a part of the Township of Plymouth. The people settled their first minister, Feb. 17th, 1795, viz : The Rev. Joseph E. Camp."* He died there in May 1837.

"The parish of MILTON is situated in the north-west corner of Litchfield. It includes within its limits, a part of Goshen, a part of Cornwall and a part of Warren. Milton was incorporated by the General Assembly at the May Session, 1795,"*

The climate of Litchfield is eminently favorable to health and longevity, and our pure and invigorating atmosphere is resorted to by strangers from the cities and the South, during the heat of summer. Our citizens have had the reputation of being distinguished for their intelligence and virtue. The peace of this community has seldom been disturbed by extensive local or personal contests; a spirit of liberality has in general existed between different religious sects, and a feeling of good will between all classes. Party spirit, it is true, has prevailed among political partizans, and formerly embittered to some extent social intercourse. But notwithstanding the calumny which at different times has been heaped upon individuals, and upon opposing parties, its effect has been temporary, and after the heat of contest has subsided, men have learnt the injustice of which they have been guilty, and that neither all that is excellent is to be found exclusively with the one party, nor all that is bad exclusively with the other. And if any there are who disbelieve a truth so obvious, they receive, in this respect, no countenance from those whose opinions are worthy of regard.

The inhabitants of Litchfield have been blessed with peace, harmony and prosperity. They have been well satisfied in preserving the valuable institutions of their forefathers, with such improvements as experience, and the spirit of the times, suggested. The History of such a people is of course somewhat barren of events interesting to posterity, and if what has been collected relative thereto, is either useful or interesting to the inhabitants or natives of the town, (and it cannot be expected to be much so to others,) the author will be satisfied with the result.

Patent of the Town of Litchfield.

The Governor and Company of the English Colony of Connecticut in New England, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting :—

KNOW YE, That the said Governor and Company, by virtue of the power granted unto them, by our late sovereign King Charles the second, of blessed memory, in and by his Majesty's patent, under the great seal of England, dated the twenty-third day of April, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, and in pursuance thereof and in General Court assembled, according to charter, did, by their act, made, May the fourteenth, Anno Domini, 1719, upon the humble petition of Lieut. John Marsh of Hartford, within the said Colony, and Dea. John Buell of Lebanon, grant unto the said John Marsh and John Buell and Partners, settlers, being in the whole fifty-seven in number, liberty to settle a town westward of Farmington, in the county of Hartford, at a place called Bantam, which town was to be in length, east and west, eight miles, three quarters, and twenty-eight rods, and in breadth, seven miles and an half, to be bounded east on Mattatuck river, west part on Shipaug river, and part on the wilderness, north by the wilderness, and south by Waterbury bounds and a west line, from Waterbury corner to the said Shipaug river. And ordered, that the said town should be called by the name of Litchfield, as more fully appears by the said act.
